OTHERWISE NICE?

I couldn't agree more with Michele Walter's letter entitled "Downgrading Rape" (EW, Aug. 16). Riding bicycles in Eugene does feel dangerous due to the incredible amount of transients that loiter or live along the paths. I particularly worry about being knocked over and robbed.

The amount of homeless, vagrant, drug and/or mentally disturbed individuals in this town is out of control. The library is beautiful, but my wife won't take our children there, as it is an acknowledged "day-time homeless shelter" and it frightens her in more ways than one. Hand sanitizer only goes so far.

I have written to the City Council and mayor asking when they are going to make public "camping" and panhandling illegal, but have never gotten a response. This problem is of epic proportions and completely ruins this otherwise nice small city.

LEGAL SEMANTICS

In response to Michele Walter's letter ("Downgrading Rape," Aug. 16): As a frequent user of the bike paths and a woman, I completely agree that we need to make them safer. But part of her letter is factually incorrect and, well, facts matter — maybe now more than ever.

The term "Unlawful Sexual Penetration" (USP) is not a "downgrading" of a rape charge. USP and rape are different crimes, but both have the same sentencing guidelines and punishments. The charge is based on the facts of the individual case and does not in any way suggest that any agency is "downgrading a woman's value as a human being." It's not "barbaric."

THIS MODERN WORLD

by TOM TOMORROW

Were the assailant prosecuted for rape when what he in fact committed was USP, a good defense attorney would have it reduced or even have his client cleared of charges and free before lunch. The charge is based on the victim's statements, not what word is going to make people feel better.

There is enough misinformation and "alternative facts" out there that I think it's important we avoid them if we want our views to be given credibility.

CLIMATE CHANGE

Kudos and gratitude for your Slant last week (Aug. 23) on our current climate change realities. It is sobering.

In 22 years there will be no snow pack in our mountains; our oceans are souring (30 percent more acidic, think vinegar) and we can expect a 500 percent increase in Western wildfires as Oregon's population doubles. Extreme fires are caused by decades of mismanagement (fire suppression and clearcutting) and logging is not the answer, as some would have us believe.

We need to create a just transition to a clean-energy future that is fossil free. We need economic justice for the communities hardest hit by decades of environmental racism. And we need it now

A tall order? Yes. Luckily, as with all big social changes, we the people are the ones to make it happen. Join the solidarity and resistance, with hundreds of communities across the nation, to "Rise for Climate, Jobs and Justice" from 1-3 pm Sept. 8 at Campbell Community Center. Meet your local change-makers and engage in actions that will create a carbon-free world, starting locally.

Communities will lead this transformation. Together we can do this! See you there!

JIFFY POP FIELD

Now that they have completely removed any trace of the old Hayward Field, it looks like they used a scorched-earth policy. Maybe that's to make sure that no one protests anymore — hard to tell.

From what I've seen of the proposed design of the new stadium, there is no trace of the original grandstands design. In fact, the new design looks more like a Jiffy Pop pan than anything related to Hayward.

So I'm going to recommend that the new stadium be christened Jiffy Pop Field. Just don't call it Hayward Field.

Hayward Field was destroyed and got hauled off in a bunch of trash trucks.

VIEWPOINT BY TARA MARIE

The North Springfield Serial Rapist

THIRTY YEARS AFTER THE NIGHTMARE, A YOUNG VICTIM THANKS SURVIVORS, PARENTS AND POLICE

I woke up to a stranger hovering over my bed. His hand clamped over my mouth. "Don't scream. There's nobody home to help you," he hissed, and brandished a knife.

Thirty years ago this summer a serial rapist began his reign of terror in north Springfield. From 1988 to 1993 over a dozen rapes and attempted rapes of young girls and teenagers were reported in my community. Springfield girls and parents lived in a virtual prison of fear, not knowing when the unidentified predator would strike next.

Most of the attacks followed a similar pattern. In the predawn darkness he entered the home of his victim through an unlocked window or door. In many cases parents were asleep in another room. The young victim would awaken to a man with a knife. Although one attack occurred in a grassy field as two girls walked home from McDonald's, that case was an exception to the pattern. Most of the victims were from ages 9 to 16.

Indeed my family's life changed in many ways after the north Springfield rapist began his crime spree. My late mother was a single parent working at the post office. My sister and I were 11 and 13 at the time. My mom and perhaps most Springfield parents lived in a constant state of high alert, trying to raise kids with a pedophile on the loose.

I remember when a reporter from The Register Guard interviewed my mother. "I can't leave my kids home alone," she told him. "It's like when they were babies!"

As a teenager, I was pretty oblivious to my mother's struggle. My top priorities were making the eighth grade basketball team and buying a "Don't Worry, Be Happy" record. In retrospect, I realize my mom put on a brave face, but in fact she (and probably most mothers in my community) suffered a lot during those years.

The nightmare ended in late 1995 when a local man was arrested on unrelated sex crimes. A DNA test linked him to several of the Springfield rapes. Michael Clifton Owen, a Eugene-Springfield native, was a 31-year-old inconspicuous neighbor who lived among us. He confessed to being the north Springfield rapist.

In June 1996 many of Owen's victims (we were young women by that time) attended his sentencing at the Lane County courthouse. Several of us testified. As a 20-year-old college student, I did not know it was quite rare for victims of sexual abuse to see their perpetrator put behind bars. According to RAINN (Rape, Abuse and Incest National Network), out of 1,000 rapes, only six perpetrators will be convicted of a felony and sent to prison.

Due in part to our testimony, Owen was sentenced to 130 years.

Three decades on, my brave mother has passed; neighbors moved away; police have retired. Is it too little, too late to say thank you? I want to express gratitude to my heroes, detectives John King and John Umenhofer of the Springfield police, and to the courageous parents who lived in north Springfield at that time.

Most of all, a sincere thank you to the survivors of Owen's crimes because our actions have ensured that he will never hurt another child again.

Finally, thank you to Bernardo for your viewpoint in Eugene Weekly (7/19). Your story inspired me to write this piece. ■

nalism. And then there is the more recent incarnation of the Weekly that dedicates cover stories and numerable inside pages to fluff stories (pickleball!) and offensive stories, such as the recent feature story about a Trump-loving UFC fighter who self-identifies as a “bully” and spouts ignorant trash about America’s winners and losers, all while claiming to do it for his “community.”

The Henry Houston article about Colby Covington is the worst piece of offensive nonsense and incoherent idol worship I have ever seen printed in this paper. I hope Houston is not on the “A” list of staff writers in the future; it’s impossible to know what he intended in producing this twaddle or what you were thinking when you printed it. If you aren’t going to make the most of your public pulpit, then stick to the social calendar and don’t flaunt your journalistic pretensions.

Jennifer Rowan-Henry

Editor’s note: If by “A” list you mean is Houston on staff, yes, he indeed flaunts his journalistic pretensions in EW each week.

COVINGTON SHAMES US

Henry Houston’s portrait of fighter Colby Covington (“Nerd Bashing Time,” Aug. 16) excuses his Trumpian jingoism as pro-wrestling pageantry. Houston insists that “despite his current trash talking, he’s still...{a} nice guy.”

We’re supposed to accept that Covington’s statements, including his dismissal of Brazilian MMA fans as “filthy animals” and his praise for Mr. Trump as a “champion of the people,” are mere posturing — that “He does it for the business, so he can then give back.”

A little racism and fascism is fine, because Covington cares about the Thurston wrestling program.

As part of the local wrestling community, I can confirm that Thurston has always been a class act. The wrestlers I grew up with in Lane County were kind, decent young men who earned respect through hard work. The color of your skin or the language your family spoke was irrelevant when you stepped on the mat — only your heart and toughness mattered.

That Covington became an NCAA All-American speaks to his mettle — wrestling at that level is demanding, and certainly Mr. Covington is an excellent fighter.

Yet Covington’s support of Mr. Trump’s nativism, which directs violence and hatred against the most vulnerable among us, is not victimless grandstanding. Covington is in a position of influence and strength — and childishly beats his chest in self-celebration. He betrays the values of the sport he claims to love. We deserve a better champion — Covington shames us.

It's been a little over two months since the University of Oregon's Hayward Field was demolished. Community members are still feeling its legacy — emotionally, nostalgically and, for local filmmaker Tim Lewis, legally.

Lewis was the protester who ran onto the historic venue's track during its final NCAA Outdoor Track and Field Championships. He jogged around the track on June 8 wearing a T-shirt emblazoned with "Save Hayward" and holding up another with the words "Pre Lives For Now" written on it.

He was arrested by UO police on misdemeanor charges of interfering with police, disorderly conduct and criminal trespass at a sporting event. His case was dropped by the city on Aug. 22, a day before he was scheduled for a hearing at the Eugene Municipal Court.

"It's sort of bittersweet, I guess," Lewis says of the dropped case. "It feels like they started this game and then just took their ball and went home with it."

Lewis says even if his case had gone to trial he still wouldn't regret his actions. "Not at all," he says.

"I mean, that day was an awesome day. It was really fun for me to get out there and see the reaction of the crowd," Lewis says. "Plus, this was a place that I used to run when I was in high school and it was special to me, and also it was sort of in honor of my past and all the people who used to run there. And I'd do it again. If we did go to court and we lost, we would've appealed. We'd continue to play that silly game and continue to fight."

Lewis says he was pretty confident things would have gone his way had he ended up in front of a jury.

His attorney Matt Watkins agrees that the case likely would have sided in Lewis' favor, especially due to inconsistencies in the police report versus what occurred on the body camera video of the officer who arrested Lewis.

In the police body cam footage, available on the web version of this story at eugeneweekly.com, Lewis interacts with officers, inquiring why he's being asked to leave and saying that he has a ticket to be in the stadium. The interaction lasted 20 seconds before Lewis was handcuffed.

"They were charging him with criminal trespass II, basically saying he remained unlawfully, which, the way the law works, that means he failed to obey an order to leave by person in charge," Watkins says. "What seems to have happened in the video is that Tim is leaning in to hear him [the officer] and he says, 'You've got to leave, you've got to leave, you've got to leave' — then, handcuffs. So, there was no actual time to comply with the order to leave."

Watkins adds: "If a person isn't afforded an opportunity to comply, I don't think a reasonable jury would have found that he had actually failed to comply when he wasn't actually afforded the opportunity. So I think it would've been a waste of the city's time and resources to prosecute this when the outcome seemed fairly clear."

Watkins says that, regardless of the legality of Lewis' case, people should be paying attention to why Lewis and others protest like this.

"I've analyzed this from a legal perspective, but Mr. Lewis also was protesting changes in the city and the way the university's doing its business and a lot of people were really upset at the short notice before they tore down a historical building to basically turn UO into Nike University which has been the trend for the last several years," Watkins says. "I think people should be paying more attention to that sort of thing."

Now that both the East and West grandstands have been demolished, Lewis says he just wishes Hayward Field had received a more respectful goodbye from Phil Knight and associates.

"What really pisses me off is, not only that they could've done this in a completely different way and maintained the East Grandstand, but also, there was a little bit of a community uprising around respecting Hayward and its past and trying to create a stadium that had that kind of history to it," Lewis says.

"And so Phil Knight and all these people hurried up and destroyed this historic place without any kind of wake or any kind of remembrance of it," he continues. "They didn't show it any respect. They never did that because they didn't have any respect for it." ■

MARKET OF CHOICE[®]
Family-owned, independent Oregon grocer for 38 years!

It's been more than six months since President Donald Trump slapped tariffs on imported solar cells and modules.

Some manufacturers, like Oregon's SolarWorld Industries America, have applauded the tariffs. But the tariffs have been seen as an unneeded obstacle for other companies with clean energy projects in the state.

Grape Solar, a Eugene-based solar manufacturer and distributor, is one business that has seen the negative impact of Trump's tariffs.

In an email to Eugene Weekly, Steve Bouton, a technical manager with Grape Solar, said imported products now cost more due to the tariffs. Chinese firms that manufacture solar cells and modules are experiencing three layers of tariffs, which were started in 2012 and recently added to by Trump.

SolarWorld Industries Americas was a co-petitioner in a case that led to Trump's 30 percent tariffs on solar firms in China and the rest of the world that was announced on Jan. 22. Tim Brightbill was trade counsel for SolarWorld, an Oregon-based solar company.

He argues that Chinese firms can circumvent most of these tariffs if they export from a manufacturing plant in another country, like Vietnam.

And he says, "The tariffs have helped to stabilize the market and give U.S. manufacturers a chance to compete." But a problem with the tariffs on imported solar cells and modules, Bouton says, is that the U.S. doesn't have enough developed solar component supply chains, so Grape Solar will still have to rely on imported components, which are affected by the tariffs.

"This has significantly lowered solar energy's competitiveness compared to traditional energy sources such as oil and gas, and unfortunately the majority of the energy market is still very much driven by price," he says.

He adds that with threats from climate change, trade policy should aim to support clean energy.

According to Brightbill, despite the help from the tariffs for SolarWorld, "it's still a difficult market due to China's over-capacity and subsidies, which repeatedly forced prices downward." But he says, thanks these tariffs, SolarWorld has been able to maintain manufacturing activity in Hillsboro.

Interestingly enough, only a few months after celebrating the tariffs, SolarWorld is now in the process of being purchased by California-based SunPower. Brightbill says he's heard the plan is to move some of SunPower's manufacturing from Mexico up to Hillsboro.

The tariffs can be understood under the concept of the "infant industrial" argument, Brightbill says. The U.S. solar industry needs protection to grow and compete with countries like China. The U.S. solar industry, however, has been active for quite some time considering that President Jimmy Carter installed solar panels on the White House in 1979.

On the other hand, protectionist policies hit smaller businesses the hardest, says Jon Miller, executive director of Oregon Solar Energy Industries Association (OSEIA). He says that's because smaller companies have the least amount of buying power or ability to make deals with manufacturing companies.

"We have a lot of small installers around the state," Miller says. "Unfortunately they get hit hardest."

In addition to the tariffs on solar cells and modules, the Trump administration placed tariffs on steel and aluminum, which are used when installing solar projects. Bouton of Grape Solar says the company has seen an increase in the cost of solar panels assembled in the U.S.

The Solar Energy Industries Association says the Trump administration further punished China on Aug. 23 by implementing an increased 25 percent tariff on such items as steel, aluminum and certain batteries and products used in solar installments.

As of now, it's unknown how much Trump's tariffs have impacted sales because Oregon Department of Energy Residential Energy Tax Credit expired at the end of 2017, muddying the picture.

The Energy Trust of Oregon is a nonprofit that helps utility customers save energy and generate renewable power and one way it does this is through cash incentives. At the end of its second quarter, it saw 310 residential customers apply for solar incentives, a 40 percent decrease from 2017's second quarter.

Miller says losing the tax credit has resulted in layoffs of about 10 percent of solar employees. The tax credit probably won't come back, but he says he and the OSEIA are working with legislators to pass some sort of support to encourage installing solar projects.

The tariffs have resulted in a slight price increase for solar projects, says Kelli Hewitt, president of E2 Solar Inc. in Bend. Then again, some solar companies in Oregon also prepared for the tariffs by stockpiling materials.

Brightbill agrees, but he says he sees a strong future for U.S. solar demand that will translate to supporting domestic solar manufacturing.

"I think there was a lot of stockpiling and hoarding," he says. "As that goes away, there will be more demand for U.S. products."

Oregon was an early leader in solar deployment and at one time ranked ninth in solar-installed capacity, according to a 2017 report by OSEIA and The Green Energy Institute. The state has since dropped to 19th in the U.S.

Oregon is ranked high in manufacturing, which will be protected further with Trump's tariffs. However, with the combination of losing the state solar tax credit and active tariffs on cheaper, imported solar components, the state's ranking for solar capacity will most likely continue to dwindle. ■

• The Register-Guard continues its downward spiral under the ownership of GateHouse Media. EW has heard from multiple sources that the RG's editorial pages are being gutted. The four-page Sunday Commentary section is to be eliminated, and the daily opinion pages will be reduced from two pages to one. This is heartbreaking. EW will continue to run all the letters and viewpoints we can fit, but we hope community outcry can convince GateHouse not to further diminish the RG and its community voice in pursuit of a higher profit margin.

• It is remarkable that John McCain, ever the warrior, is torturing Donald Trump even after the senator's death. He has eclipsed Trump in the media, the cruelest cut of all for this president. McCain has banned Trump from his funeral and invited Bush and Obama to give the eulogies. He has inspired veterans organizations to insist that the White House flag fly at half-staff until after the burial. We wonder if any of this will affect Trump's support inside and outside the Republican Party. He wasn't without his flaws, but if the late Sen. McCain can help defeat this man he detested, for good reason, it will be the closing chapter in a truly amazing life.

• Remember "Classical Gas"? It was the instrumental solo that aspiring guitar players of a certain age tried desperately to learn after Eugene's Mason Williams released it as a single — and won three Grammy awards — in 1968. Williams may be popularly known as a one-hit wonder, but he wrote for the Smothers Brothers Comedy Hour and Saturday Night Live, and around Eugene he's also been a gracious gentleman, supporting the Eugene Symphony as a frequent performer at its holiday shows in the past and supporting the environment with his 1984 album Of Time and Rivers Flowing. Williams turned 80 years old last week. Happy birthday, Mason!

• Jeff Merkley is hardly a reality TV star. That's good. In the 2020 presidential election, we the voters should want the opposite, a smart, truth-telling, hard-working, compassionate leader. Meerah Powell's cover story this week explores Oregon's junior senator as a candidate for that job. Political chatter suggests that he would need to gather a Kennedy-style staff. Could he do that? Is Washington Gov. Jay Insley a stronger candidate from the Northwest? Maybe. Are Merkley and Oregon too out-of-the-loop for a presidential run? Ever hear of Jimmy Carter from Georgia and Bill Clinton from Arkansas? Merkley hasn't made the final decision. What do you think?

Should Jeff Merkley be our next president?

• Fall is here for the City Club of Eugene. Forums begin again on Sept. 7 at noon in the Baker Center with a look at public safety in downtown Eugene by Eugene Police Chief Skinner and Brittany Quick-Warner, director of the Chamber of Commerce. It would be nice to include the perspective of some of our local homeless advocates, to discuss a population that businesses often blame for downtown flaws. Also, working with the League of Women Voters, the club will host candidates and forums on ballot measures all this fall before the important elections in November.

Sen. Jeff Merkley on the potential for a presidential run, his nationally publicized activism and more

BY MEERAH POWELL

Merkley and I sat down to chat around 11 am on a Friday at the Subway restaurant on Gateway Street in Springfield — a quick lunch stop in between his various other appointments and meetings for the day. (His Subway order was a six-inch Italian BMT and a Dr. Pepper, if you're curious.)

It can be easy to forget about the scope of Merkley's political work when talking with him. He may be busy, but there's nothing inherently rushed about him. Though he's clearly far from unprofessional, Merkley has an air of casualness to him. Dressed in a nice button-up shirt paired with jeans and cowboy boots, he talked before we formally began our interview about a recent trip to the coast with his 13-year-old Airedale terrier, Sadie.

When he's not in Oregon, Merkley also does a lot of important national work — most notably, as of late, visiting a detention center in Brownsville, Texas, to reveal the visceral truths of immigrant parents and children's separation under the Trump administration's zero-tolerance policy. The viral video of Merkley visiting the detention center gained him a profile in The New York Times and Rolling Stone, along with other spots in national media.

When he is in Oregon, Merkley makes sure to have time for locals. During that August day in Springfield when we met, Merkley did three media interviews, sat down with the interim director of the Veterans Administration in Roseburg, met with leaders of Lowell, Westfir and Oakridge, held a Eugene small business roundtable, gathered with local union members and held a campaign event.

His days are usually scheduled this tightly, he says.

In many ways, Merkley is just a normal Oregonian who has gone on to do very extraordinary things.

Growing up in Myrtle Creek, then Roseburg, before moving to Portland as a kid, Sen. Merkley never envisioned going into politics. He says he definitely never dreamed about ever becoming president. But now, after 20 years in Oregon politics, he just might be taking that plunge into the presidential run come late this fall.

"I'm exploring the possibility of running for the presidency," Merkley says. "I've been in the early primary states and been well-received."

He says he and his wife, Mary, will make a decision on it sometime after November. For now, he's still doing all he can in his position as a U.S. senator.

Merkley might not be all-in for the presidential run yet, but he has a lot of people who believe in him, in Oregon and across the states, thanks to his vocal opposition to President Donald Trump, his adherence to a progressive stance and his worldview.

In fact, though Merkley never saw himself in politics, he's always held the big-picture idea of making the world better.

"The philosophy I grew up with — and it was embedded certainly through my church, through Boy Scouts, through my parents — was to take your life on this planet and make the world a better place," Merkley says. "And so that does mean confronting injustice, and unfortunately there is a lot of injustice to confront."

OREGON-BASED INSPIRATION FOR ECONOMIC EMPOWERMENT

Merkley has been concerned with tackling broad issues while serving as a politician — health care, civil rights, foreign policy and his small town origins have inspired a lot of his work. One issue we discussed at length was economic injustice and restoring the American Dream in the face of the current administration.

Both his mother and father grew up poor, Merkley says, yet they were able to afford a house on a single income.

"My parents' generation saw, from 1945-1975, this incredible improvement of the position of working families," he says. "It was a steady curve of productivity. The entire wealth of the country grew, but workers got a fair share of that growth. From 1975 till now, we have not gotten a share of that wealth — that wealth has been flat or declining."

That idea of being able to build wealth from nothing is scarcely achievable anymore, Merkley says.

"What we have seen over the decades is just an absolute oppression of the middle class, squeezing them for the benefit of the wealthy, and we see that in this administration more than anything we've seen before," he says.

"For example, last year, in 2017, a main mission was to do a tax bill — it's a tax scam — that borrowed a trillion and a half dollars and gave it almost all to the wealthiest Americans," Merkley says. "It's the most unbelievable bank heist of the national treasure. This is something that happens in corrupt nations where there's a government colluding with the wealthy and well-connected."

Merkley says he's working to strengthen the middle class by crafting legislation regarding job growth and affordable housing, among other things.

"That's a big battle, but I'm continuously immersed in it," he says.

BETWEEN THE WORLD AND MERKLEY

As a U.S. senator from Oregon, along with tackling local and national issues, Merkley adheres to that idea of making the world better, and he's worked globally as well — all while making sure to tie his international trips back to the U.S., and specifically to what the Trump administration can be doing to help and what it hasn't been doing.

That global mindset came naturally. Before his career in politics, he traveled to Ghana as a high school exchange student and later worked in villages in Mexico and India.

Last year, Merkley took a trip to Myanmar on a fact-finding mission for an update on the Rohingya genocide.

"I organized a congressional delegation to go in November of last year to find out what had gone on," Merkley says. "We did see some things in Myanmar that were powerful, like seeing a Muslim quarter, which was a section of the city which the residents were not allowed to leave, and there were police stations at the end of the streets, and it gives you shivers down your spine. It's like an early-stage Warsaw ghetto."

Merkley also visited some intensely crowded Rohingya refugee camps in Bangladesh, something he says the U.S. needs to be paying more attention to and shining a light on.

"So what are these refugees to do? The U.S. president has not said one word," Merkley says. "So the anniversary is coming up, one year on Aug. 25, of the start of the ethnic cleansing or genocide. It would be a perfect time for the State Department to release these reports. So I'm calling on the State Department to release this report and for the president, our president, President Trump, to take this as an occasion to speak to the world about the importance of holding Myanmar accountable."

A few months ago, in May, Merkley visited Puerto Rico to check on recovery efforts after Hurricane Maria. Though it's a U.S. territory, he says, the Trump administration has not treated Puerto Rico as its own.

"It's abysmal," Merkley says. "This administration has really done a terrible job at helping families recover."

"This is like the pace of recovery you would expect in a third world country, not the United States of America," he says. "It made me feel like people who live in U.S. territories who are U.S. citizens should have voting representation in the Senate in some form, because I can't imagine if they had somebody who could represent them and had the clout of having a vote, that they would've been ignored or neglected like that."

He adds: "If there were other things that I knew about that were going on that I could shine a light on, I'd travel there and do it. So, stay tuned."

MAKE (BIPARTISAN) AMERICA HEALTHY AGAIN

A resident of Portland, Merkley is very invested in issues here in Oregon, regardless of the amount of recent national attention he's gotten and speculations as to a presidential run.

Though he can be counted as a progressive, as far as the U.S. Senate goes — he was the only senator to endorse Bernie Sanders in the presidential primaries — he spends a lot of his time talking to conservatives when he's in the Beaver State.

Each year, Merkley visits every county in Oregon for a town hall meeting with its residents. "We have 36 counties in Oregon. Many of them, the majority, are actually quite red."

"It's possible to build bridges," Merkley says of the political tug-of-war between Republicans and Democrats.

"I'm constantly reaching out to my Republican colleagues to say, 'Hey, will you join me in this?' It's possible on more modest pieces of legislation," he says. "On the things that have become deeply polarized through the difference of the split in the national media, it gets much harder. Much, much harder."

One hot-button issue he discusses with his conservative constituents in Oregon is health care. And he's even gone so far as to mention universal health care. Though a lot of the citizens Merkley talks with say they hate the Affordable Care Act (ACA), it's usually an opinion based on misconceptions of how the health care reform act works, along with assumptions across partisan lines.

"I found that with the ACA, for example, people would ask me, 'Why are you supporting this government takeover and why aren't you listening to us?'" Merkley says. In these situations, he says, he makes a point to explain some of the main features of the ACA, such as the coverage of pre-existing conditions at the same price as anyone else and a website where you can easily compare plans.

"By the time I finished, people in the room were going, 'We knew we didn't like this Obamacare thing, but we're not sure why,'" Merkley says. "And I think it's widely understood and felt by people on both sides of the aisle that we have a system of health care that's way too complicated and that we need to have a system that's much simpler, where you have health care when you need it just by virtue of living here in the United States of America."

He adds: "Maybe there are progressives representing it, but those ideas — when they're presented as the reality of, 'Would you like that opportunity to be part of that?' — people say 'Yes' on both sides of the aisle."

Merkley has been working on legislation to eventually make health care available to all Americans.

In April, he sponsored a bill in Congress called the "Choose Medicare Act." It would establish Part E, meaning Medicare that is available for everyone, not only those 65 and over.

Regarding the Choose Medicare Act, Merkley says, "You can go to the exchange [health care marketplace], you can choose a public option, a Medicare policy that would not be subsidized."

The Choose Medicare Act would be available to individuals as well as employers as an option to offer to their employees.

In a press release on the act, Merkley says that it would put "consumers and businesses in the driver's seat on the pathway to universal health care."

The bill has been read twice in the Senate and has been referred to the Senate Committee on Finance, which may or may not release the bill to be voted on.

WHAT ARE THE CHANCES?

With Merkley considering a presidential run in 2020, those who have known him throughout his political career say it would not be a surprising move.

From the late '90s into the early 2000s, former Oregon Sen. Tony Corcoran was in the Oregon Senate, while Merkley was serving in the House. Corcoran writes the column "Hot Air Society" for this paper.

Corcoran says even early in Merkley's political career, the senator was highly motivated.

"I wasn't surprised that he ascended so quickly," he says. "I think that he's the Senate equivalent of Peter DeFazio in so many ways, in terms of people having respect for his position. He's not a flake, and he's consistent."

Corcoran says a presidential run requires a good amount of planning. If Merkley does run, it most likely will be pretty obvious in November.

"I wouldn't be surprised because, I mean, I think that that consideration occurs when a whole bunch of ducks line up in a row," Corcoran says. "It's early. You don't have this discussion earnestly until November."

He adds: "Once you throw your hat in the ring like that, it'll just be about keeping an eye on who encourages him and supports him and so forth."

And it seems Merkley has been doing some planning. In recent months he's visited Iowa and New Hampshire — popular early-primary states for presidential candidates to make names for themselves.

Merkley has gained national attention for his determined opposition to injustice, especially that of the Trump administration, as well as his creation and endorsement of Bernie Sanders-esque progressive legislation.

But he'll still have his work cut out for him against well-known Democratic darlings like senators Elizabeth Warren and Sanders, if either of them decides to run.

Jack Roberts, former Oregon Bureau of Labor and Industries commissioner, one-time political columnist for The Oregonian and local Republican pundit, says Merkley winning in a presidential race might be kind of an outside chance, but still a possibility.

"I think it's a long shot, but looking ahead to 2020, there's no immediate frontrunner, so it's possible," he says. "In my lifetime, the only real outsider who has gone through and gotten the nomination and won has been Jimmy Carter, and that's been quite a while ago."

Roberts says some more well-known potential candidates like Sanders, or even potentially Joe Biden, may have better chances, but age is a factor that might be taken into account — since both of them would be in their late 70s in 2020. Merkley, however, will be 64 come the 2020 election. "Some of the best known and most promising potential candidates would also be the oldest presidents ever elected, breaking the record just set by Trump," Roberts says. "So I don't know how the voters as a whole feel about continuing to elect older people to serve."

A safer, more probable option for Merkley, Roberts says, might be running as a vice presidential candidate. Regardless, Roberts says, Merkley will have to weigh both those options as he is up for re-election in the U.S. Senate in 2020 and can only run in one of those races. According to the Oregon Constitution, "No person holding a lucrative office, or appointment under the United States or under this State, shall be eligible to a seat in the Legislative Assembly; nor shall any person hold more than one lucrative office at the same time."

Roberts says, "If he's on the ballot either as a president or vice presidential candidate, which I think frankly, I don't know if this is his intention, but I think of him more as a candidate for vice president, either way he wouldn't be able to stay in the Senate."

If he does take the plunge to run, Roberts says the biggest thing Merkley can do right now is gain more recognition and distinguish himself as a candidate.

"It's hard for me to say exactly how Merkley distinguishes himself from the rest of the field, but in a strange environment like we have today, anything's possible," Roberts says. "The first challenge is getting the nomination, and I don't think he'll be the only progressive Democrat running in the race."

He adds: "I think that's going to be the biggest challenge. What are you going to tell people that you have to offer that the other candidates don't?"

FOR THE GOOD OF THE PEOPLE

Merkley doesn't seem to be motivated so much by winning, per se, as he is by the idea of genuinely doing the right thing.

It's what propelled him into politics in the first place, from his work in developing countries and then in the nonprofit sphere — the feeling that the right things weren't getting done, so he would have to get in there and do them himself.

That, it seems, is what has always motivated Merkley, and he hopes that same desire for good is motivating everyday citizens right now in the current political climate. He says the biggest thing to do is to get involved and inspire others to do the same.

"Right now it's really important to reach out to your friends and family in other states and say to them, 'It's important you call your senator and weigh in,'" Merkley says. "It's important to be off the sidelines. That could mean getting engaged through volunteering for a nonprofit, getting engaged by writing letters to the editor."

He says this is the only way to truly make America, and the world, a better place.

"America is in big trouble. We're in a really dark place," he says. "And we basically have a government under assault from three powerful corrupting forces: one is dark money in campaigns, one is gerrymandering and one is voter suppression. And the only way to counter that is citizen engagement."

He adds: "Our vision of our Constitution is all about a government that would reflect the will of the people. Right now, through those forces, we have a system that produces laws for the powerful and the privileged, so if we're going to reclaim the vision that our nation was founded on, we have to be engaged."

Regardless of what Merkley decides come November, expect to hear his name pop up more and more in the coming months.

For example, he says, a book about his life and work might not be off the table. "There's still time left this year," Merkley says about publishing something in preparation for a presidential run. "I have noticed that virtually everybody running or thinking about running has a book."

Sitting in that Springfield Subway, he asked me and my colleague, EW staff writer Henry Houston, what the title and cover of his book should be. All the advice I had to give was to make sure to make the title something snappy and memorable. Henry suggested to Merkley that he and his dog, Sadie, be on the cover.

So, if next time you're walking by Smith Family Books and you see a book in the window with Merkley and an Airedale terrier on the front, you may want to pick it up. Because, who knows? The man might be our next president. ■

Categorically Correct Trivia w/ Elliot Martinez, 6:30-8pm today

At some point in his life, The Rock no longer wanted to be the "people's champion" and decided to trade in his professional wrestling prestige to become a movie star. Sadly, wrestling has never recovered from his departure. Regardless, if you can smell what The Rock is cooking, then you probably know the importance of emergency preparedness. Disaster Movie in the Park: *San Andreas is the perfect event to showcase one of his movies and have a lesson in what to do when Oregon's "Big One" finally happens (you know, that pesky 9.0 earthquake that we're bound to have one day). Before the movie starts, learn more about emergency preparedness, see the Eugene-Springfield Natural Hazard Mitigation Plan and vote on which mitigation projects you think Eugene should complete. Best of all, there's free popcorn. San Andreas is rated PG-13.

The festivities begin at 7:30 pm Friday, Aug. 31, and the movie shows at dusk. The event is located at Washington Park, 2025 Washington Street. FREE. — Henry Houston

Have you been dying to learn some of drag's best-kept secrets? Lucky for you, Delighted Tobe here will offer her insight in the show Drag 101 Starring Delighted Tobe here. She grabbed the nation's attention on the television show America's Got Talent and has 17 years of experience as a drag queen. That deadly combination means it'll be a show full of personal stories, gossip, how-tos and live singing. Maybe after the show you'll feel like you could make it on RuPaul's Drag Race. But at the very least, the show will work toward Delighted Tobe here's mission to encourage audience self-discovery and accept others through the lens of laughter and entertainment. So come with an open mind and leave with an awareness. In other words, you'll get woke.

Drag 101 starts at 8 pm Friday, Aug. 31, at Wildish Theater, located at 630 Main Street in Springfield. Tickets are $20-$30.

SY'S MATTERS

40TH ANNIVERSARY

Sy Zeer and his wife Gail opened Sy's New York Pizza on August 31, 1978. A native New Yorker, Sy noticed that there were no pizza joints selling pizza by the slice, so he set out to fill that void. Demand for whole pizzas soon followed, Sy's quickly became a U of O campus mainstay.

I purchased Sy's in May of 2006, and Sy personally spent a month training me in the operation of the business as well as creating the pizza that we love to make. The recipes have essentially remained unchanged. After 40 years we are still cooking in the same oven and using the same Hobart mixer to make our dough and grate our cheese. A conservative estimate is that our ovens have produced over 600,000 whole pizzas over the years. We are very pleased to be celebrating 40 years in business on August 31st. 2018.

THE STORIES WE TELL

At first, Madeline is a cat.

Cats sniff things; they curl up in strange places; they pounce; they rub their faces on their people and want scratches. Madeline (Helena Howard) does all these things. Her mother, Regina (Miranda July), is disconcerted, but goes along with it well enough. Madeline's being a cat is not really all that unusual.

Madeline is 16, biracial and an actress; Regina drives her to rehearsals where she is the youngest member of a diverse theater troupe led by Evangeline (Molly Parker, a master at atypical maternal roles). Madeline becomes a sea turtle on the lip of the stage; she watches the other performers intently.

Often, in Josephine Decker's third feature film, focus is unsteady, unpredictable; the camera stares just at a person's eyes or through the eyeholes of a mask, leaving important things blurry or shifting more often than you expect.

From the first frames, Decker shows us her visual language, which isn't like any other, and she leaves us to translate it as we will. It's exhilarating — and a little scary, given how hand-holdy mainstream films are — to feel that trusted as a viewer.

Madeline's Madeline creates a strangely immersive film experience, which is fitting: Evangeline is trying to create an immersive theater project. She cozies up to charismatic yet quiet Madeline, asking her about her relationship with her mother, her history, her feelings, beginning to build the show's narrative around the young woman. Things seep in from reality: a cat, an iron, Madeline's mother's floral sweater, Madeline's stint in a psych ward.

But Madeline's life is her own — she makes unwise choices, she stares blankly at adults, she shifts from excited to surly faster than her bewildered mother can follow. One of the wonders of Decker's film is that Madeline's mercurialness feels so normal; watching her is remembering the way feelings can drown out everything else when you're young. Her self-consciousness is vibrant; her confidence is breathtaking. The way she expresses the range of existence between those things adds up to one of the most nuanced depictions of teenagerhood I've ever seen.

So many insistent feelings fit in the swirling frames of this film. July plays up Regina's seeming fragility. The scene in which she temporarily joins the troupe for a round of improv is painful to watch, all that insecurity artfully mirrored.

Parker is distressingly good at the careful tightrope walk of the teacher in a close teacher-student relationship, her face saying everything she probably shouldn't say to a child not her own: I'm disappointed in you, you're scaring me, why do you act like that and how can I use your story?

But this film belongs to Howard, and in more ways than it would be fair to explain here. She lets us see the exploration that performance can be, the way she stretches herself, chooses new ways to interact with her reality and reclaims stories she's been told about herself. When she takes back her narrative, the movie flips, or eats its own tail, or inverts itself.

I wish I could read about every viewer's experience of the film's end, in which Decker faces the questions her own film raises about who a story belongs to, who gets to tell it and how it gets told. These questions aren't answered, but reconceived, presented anew: Madeline's Madeline is not a statement but a fiercely curious exploration of the dense relationships between artist and viewer, art and life, story and teller, and the different ways we perform ourselves every day. ## CHANNEL YOUR INNER LIGHT

It's clear by now that human civilization won't change its ways to deter the worst-case scenario of climate change. With escalating temperatures and longer droughts, it may be that humanity has run its course.

That's why Star Trek: The Next Generation's classic episode "The Inner Light" somewhat foreshadows our future.

Trek Theatre, Eugene's volunteer-led sci-fi theatre troupe, takes on what is considered one of the best episodes of the Star Trek series — one fans always request, says Christina Allaback, the production's director.

Trek Theatre will celebrate its fifth anniversary by staging an adaptation of "The Inner Light." The episode has Captain Jean Luc-Picard experience life on the dying planet of Kataan, which is slowly becoming inhabitable due to a drought caused by changing climate from a dying sun. The civilization, however, doesn't have the technology to leave the planet.

It's often easy to draw a line from Star Trek: The Next Generation to universal issues — much like Shakespeare's work — because the series explores the human condition, Allaback says.

Trek Theatre has been telling these sorts of stories since 2013. The group kicked it all off with an adaptation of "Tin Man," which was prefaced with an introduction by sci-fi and TV writer David Bischoff. Bischoff lived in Eugene until his death in March 2018 and wrote the Star Trek episode.

Aside from that, Trek Theatre doesn't exactly have the accolades of Shakespearian heavies and Star Trek actors Patrick Stewart and William Shatner. But Allaback says the local actors have passion for the series and the sci-fi genre, and that makes for a compelling performance.

"What I love is that these people love it, and you can feel it," she says. "These people love Star Trek and sci-fi and really shows in the performance."

It's meaningful work for Allaback, who jokes that she's finally putting her Theatre degrees to good use by directing the crew of Trek Theatre.

The production of "The Inner Light" has a shorter running time than the episode, but the coming performance will also include a retrospective of snippets from past shows, Allaback says.

The troupe's repertoire branched out from focusing exclusively on Star Trek, with productions such as the sci-fi classic Forbidden Planet and a live adaptation of the radio performance that started the franchise of the Hitchhikers Guide to the Galaxy.

Allaback says the Trekkies are looking into doing more ambitious projects in the future, like a musical version of the legendary Star Trek: The Original Series episode "Arena," where Captain James T. Kirk battles a Gorn (a species of badass bipedal reptilians).

In the meantime, Earth might be going the way of Kataan, so go see the production of "The Inner Light" as a prognosis of our future. Even if humanity dies, perhaps Trump's Space Force could somehow preserve the memories of our civilization.

If so, I just hope they include "The Inner Light" along with Bach's Brandenburg Concertos. ■

Trek Theatre's "The Inner Light" runs 5-6 pm Sept. 1 and Sept. 7, and 2 pm Sept. 2 and Sept. 8, at Amazon Community Center, 2700 Hilyard Street. The performance also visits Central City Park, 600 S.W. Madison Avenue, Corvallis, 3-4 pm Sunday, Sept. 16; performances are FREE.

ANIMAL HOUSE PHOTOS EVOKE AN EXOTIC TIME

These days, when just about everyone has a camera and most of us have appeared as "extras" in someone else's photos, it can be easy to forget that just a few decades ago the situation was quite different. Back in the late 1970s, amateur photography was the domain of serious hobbyists.

Among them was John Bauguess, chronicling the local scene with gusto and unusual skill. His wide-angle monochrome shots of bygone Lane County, a few hundred of which are now stored for posterity at University of Oregon archives, are a historical marker of sorts — and a treasure trove of information about the past.

In 1977 Bauguess turned his lens to the filming of Animal House in Cottage Grove. Then, as now, the town's Main Street had a down-home vibe straight out of central casting, a vibe that appealed to director John Landis. His film's final parade scene occupies only a few minutes in the final cut, but it took eight days to shoot.

For a week, Cottage Grove's downtown was a hive of Hollywood activity. Eight hundred extras were hired. Several dozen of them are visible in the small selection of Bauguess inkjet prints, now on display through September at the Cottage Grove Museum.

The photos are as remarkable for what they don't show. Aside from one photo of budding star John Belushi, they are essentially pedestrian. They show average-looking town denizens idling on the set's fringes, waiting for the next live action.

By focusing on the sidelines, Bauguess allows the humdrum details to dominate. Filmed in the 1970s, the movie is set in 1962. Yesteryear's hats, coats, hairstyles and signage seem exotic. They weren't shot abroad. Instead they were taken just four decades ago.

But the effect is similar. The photographs' minor anachronisms fascinate, and keep the viewer's eye moving through the frame in search of more. Everything is altered, it seems, except the buildings and backdrops, many of which appear similar today.

Whether subjects change over time or remain static, their photographic depictions almost invariably become more interesting. And when the subject is familiar — a local main street, say — this is doubly so.

Bauguess' photos drive this point home. Local photo and history buffs should make the quick trip south to see them. ■

MUSIC BY WILL KENNEDY

GOOD MUSIC PEOPLE

It doesn't take long before we're arguing the relative merits of vinyl records versus other formats. "Buddy Holly, I don't want to hear it polished," says Ian Chastain. Chastain is one of a trio of DJs I'm talking with, including Dawn Baby and Jen Drake, at — where else? — Skip's Records and CD World in West Eugene. We're talking about Bad Music for Bad People, an all-vinyl DJ night hosted every first Friday at Luckey's Club downtown. "You want to hear the crackles and pops," Chastain continues. "That's the warmth of it," adds Dawn Baby. The three friends came to deejaying differently: Dawn Baby had a radio show, Drake is known for deejaying at the wildly popular '80s Night and Chastain from his career at a record store (he works at Skip's) and a chronic habit of buying records. I'm told Luckey's asked the trio to come together for a monthly garage, soul and rockabilly night. "It's the dream team," Baby says. "Our music merges really well." "It's a rock 'n' roll night," Chastain continues, but everything gets played — from Alvin & the Chipmunks to Motley Crue. Drake usually plays rock. "Because I can't compete with the soul goddess," she adds, referring to Dawn Baby. "We're kind of each other's own biggest fans," she continues. "Whatever these two throw on makes me so happy." Each DJ has a different way to prepare for the night. "I grab three boxes of whatever I'm interested in that day," Dawn Baby reveals. "You read the crowd and see what happens." I ask if people dance. "You kind of start out slow, playing what you want," Baby responds, "and then you try and build it up so by the end everybody's drunk, and then there's dancing." "When I put on the original Gloria Jones 'Tainted Love,'" Chastain explains, "people start dancing."

What's common among all the DJs is a love of music as well as record collections that take up entire rooms in their homes. They buy records several times a week, and Dawn Baby occasionally goes to Portland to shop because she frequently taps out the Eugene market on her favorites: soul and rockabilly. "You want to share your collection," Chastain says. "I don't want to sell my collection, but I could share it." "I always wanted to be in a band, and I could never play an instrument," Dawn Baby admits, so she thought, "I can play records!" It doesn't take long before we're back to talking about the audio quality of vinyl. "Tommy Iommi's guitar tone," Chastain says, "is so different on vinyl than it is on CD." He then cracks a smile, adding: "I know we're nerdy."

The next edition of Bad Music for Bad People is 10 pm Friday, Sept. 7, at Luckey's Club; $3, 21-plus.

WHAT IS LOVE

New love is a reel of magical snippets: kissing in the candy aisle of a convenience store, waking up first and thinking someone's shoulder is the prettiest thing, making out on your shitty couch in your shitty first apartment.

U.K. electronic artist and producer Mura Masa (Alex Crossan) explores stories of love and life beyond Cinderella-esque rhetoric with his stunning music videos and consistently fresh tunes.

"I wrote off electronic music as being entirely centered around dancing and mindlessness," Crossan says, "which wasn't something I could relate to growing up in a place with almost zero club culture."

By the time he was 15, electronic pop icons like James Blake proved to Crossan how malleable the genre is, and how it's a tool to weave stories deeper than getting wasted until sunrise.

Crossan's career has reached astonishing heights since his first album, Soundtrack to a Death (2014), and he has racked up hundreds of millions of online streams and collaborated with big names like A$AP Rocky, NAO and Yoni Lappin.

His most prevalent theme is love — not the kind of love regurgitated in romantic comedies, but that which is swollen with real life yet kept behind the scenes in big media. We're talking queer, melanin-rich, fluid and constantly moving love.

"We're not going out of the way to patronize and wave those stories in people's faces," Crossan says. "It just happens to be at this moment in time that those are the stories that need telling and demand our attention. If the videos just told straight white love stories, then what are we doing with our art?"

Between the his stunning music videos and the wide array of melodies, Crossan spins relatable narratives that answer the age old electro pop question, "What is love?"

Mura Masa plays 9 pm Thursday, Aug. 30, at WOW Hall; tickets $25 in advance.

FREE WILL ASTROLOGY

BY ROB BREZSNY

ARIES (March 21-April 19): In Alice's Adventures in Wonderland, our heroine encounters a talking caterpillar as he smokes a hookah on top of a tall mushroom. "Who are you?" he asks her. Alice is honest: "I know who I was when I got up this morning, but I think I must have been changed several times since then." She says this with uneasiness. In the last few hours, she has twice been shrunk down to a tiny size and twice grown as big as a giant. All these transformations have unnerved her. In contrast to Alice, I'm hoping you'll have a positive attitude about your upcoming shifts and mutations, Aries. From what I can tell, your journey through the Season of Metamorphosis should be mostly fun and educational.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Juan Villarino has hitchhiked more than 2,350 times in 90 countries. His free rides have carried him more than 100,000 miles. He has kept detailed records, so he's able to say with confidence that Iraq is the best place to catch a lift. Average wait time there is seven minutes. Jordan and Romania are good, too, with nine- and twelve-minute waits, respectively. In telling you about his success, I don't mean to suggest that now is a favorable time to hitchhike. But I do want you to know that the coming weeks will be prime time to solicit favors, garner gifts, and make yourself available for metaphorical equivalents of free rides. You're extra magnetic and attractive. How could anyone resist providing you with the blessings you need and deserve?

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): One of the big stories of 2018 concerns your effort to escape from a star-crossed trick of fate — to fix a long-running tweak that has subtly undermined your lust for life. How successful will you be in this heroic quest? That will hinge in part on your faith in the new power you've been developing. Another factor that will determine the outcome is your ability to identify and gain access to a resource that is virtually magical even though it appears nondescript. I bring this to your attention, Gemini, because I suspect that a key plot twist in this story will soon unfold.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Potential new allies are seeking entrance to your domain. Existing allies aspire to be closer to you. I'm worried you may be a bit overwhelmed; that you might not exercise sufficient discrimination. I therefore urge you to ask yourself these questions about each candidate. 1. Does this person understand what it means to respect your boundaries? 2. What are his or her motivations for wanting contact with you? 3. Do you truly value and need the gifts each person has to give you? 4. Everyone in the world has a dark side. Can you intuit the nature of each person's dark side? Is it tolerable? Is it interesting?

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): While a young man, the future Roman leader Julius Caesar was kidnapped by Sicilian pirates. They proposed a ransom of 620 kilograms of silver. Caesar was incensed at the small size of the ransom — he believed he was worth more — and demanded that his captors raise the sum to 1,550 kilograms. I'd love to see you unleash that kind of bravado in the coming weeks, Leo — preferably without getting yourself kidnapped. In my opinion, it's crucial that you know how valuable you are, and make sure everyone else knows, as well.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Romanian philosopher Emil Cioran loved the music of Johann Sebastian Bach. "Without Bach, God would be a complete second-rate figure," he testified, adding, "Bach's music is the only argument proving the creation of the Universe cannot be regarded as a complete failure." I invite you to emulate Cioran's passionate clarity, Virgo. From an astrological perspective, now is an excellent time to identify people and things that consistently invigorate your excitement about your destiny. Maybe you have just one shining exemplar, like Cioran, or maybe you have more. Home in on the phenomena that in your mind embody the glory of creation.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): I foresee the withering of a hope or the disappearance of a prop or the loss of leverage. This ending may initially make you feel melancholy, but I bet it will ultimately prove beneficent — and maybe lead you to resources that were previously unavailable. Here are rituals you could perform that may help you catalyze the specific kind of relief and release you need: 1. Wander around a graveyard and sing songs you love. 2. Tie one end of a string around your ankle and the other end around an object that symbolizes an influence you want to banish from your life. Then cut the string and bury the object. 3. Say this ten times: "The end makes the beginning possible."

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): "If a man treats a life artistically, his brain is his heart," wrote Oscar Wilde. I'll translate that into a more complete version: "If a person of any gender treats life artistically, their brain is their heart." This truth will be especially applicable for you in the coming weeks. You'll be wise to treat your life artistically. You'll thrive by using your heart as your brain. So I advise you to wield your intelligence with love. Understand that your most incisive insights will come when you're feeling empathy and seeking intimacy. As you crystallize clear visions about the future, make sure they are generously suffused with ideas about how you and your people can enhance your joie de vivre.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): "My tastes are simple," testified Sagittarian politician Winston Churchill. "I am easily satisfied with the best." I propose that we make that your motto for now. While it may not be a sound idea to demand only the finest of everything all the time, I think it will be wise for you to do so during the next three weeks. You will have a mandate to resist trifles and insist on excellence. Luckily, this should motivate you to raise your own standards and expect the very best from yourself.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Russian playwright Anton Chekhov articulated a principle he felt was essential to telling a good story: If you say early in your tale that there's a rifle hanging on the wall, that rifle must eventually be used. "If it's not going to be fired, it shouldn't be hanging there," declared Chekhov. We might wish that real life unfolded with such clear dramatic purpose. To have our future so well-foreshadowed would make it easier to plan our actions. But that's not often the case. Many elements pop up in our personal stories that ultimately serve no purpose. Except now, that is, for you Capricorns. I suspect that in the next six weeks, plot twists will be telegraphed in advance.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Would it be fun to roast marshmallows on long sticks over scorching volcanic vents? I suppose. Would it be safe? No! Aside from the possibility that you could get burned, the sulfuric acid in the vapors would make the cooked marshmallows taste terrible, and might cause them to explode. So I advise you to refrain from adventures like that. On the other hand, I will love it if you cultivate a playful spirit as you contemplate serious decisions. I'm in favor of you keeping a blithe attitude as you navigate your way through tricky maneuvers. I hope you'll be jaunty in the midst of rumbling commotions.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): People will be thinking about you more than usual, and with greater intensity. Allies and acquaintances will be revising their opinions and understandings about you, mostly in favorable ways, although not always. Loved ones and not-so-loved ones will also be reworking their images of you, coming to altered conclusions about what you mean to them and what your purpose is. Given these developments, I suggest that you be proactive about expressing your best intentions and displaying your finest attributes.

HOMEWORK What pose would it be a relief for you to drop? How are you faking, and what could you do to stop? Freewillastrology.com.

SAVAGE LOVE

BY DAN SAVAGE

This woman has gone down on me (I'm a man) more than half a dozen times in the last three months. Each time seems to be better than the previous! She does not want reciprocation. She has also turned down all my offers for intercourse. As far as I know, she is heterosexual just like me. What's with that? I am getting a bit frustrated. Also, without going all the way, am I considered a friend with benefits?

Just Chilling

You're benefiting here—think of all those blowjobs—and if she's a friend, you can certainly regard yourself as a friend with benefits. As for why she won't allow you to eat her pussy or put your dick in her pussy, JC, well, a few things spring to mind. She could be one of those women who love to give head and that's all she wants from a casual partner. Or she could have body-image issues. Or she could have a sexually transmitted infection, and she'd rather blow than disclose. Or she might be unwilling to risk pregnancy. Or she could be intersex or trans and not ready to open up. If you enjoy those blowjobs—if you're enjoying the benefits—focus on what you are getting instead of what you're not.

My husband and I occasionally go to swingers clubs. I don't want to inadvertently fuck any Trump supporters, but I hate the idea of bringing up politics and killing everyone's collective boner. Any suggestions would be appreciated!

Occasionally Swinging

At the risk of killing your boner forever, OS, the organized swinging scene "leans right," as pollster Charlie Cook would put it if Charlie Cook polled swingers. Easily half of the couples I met at a big swingers convention I attended in Las Vegas told me they were Republicans. One man—a swinger from Texas—told me he was a "traditional values" type of guy and that's why he opposed same-sex marriage. Fun fact: His wife was off fucking someone else's husband while we were chitchatting in the hotel bar. Good times.

I'm a happily married 35-year-old mom. I have a loving and devoted husband. Recently, I started a job to get out of the house more and interact with more people. Well, it turns out my new boss is a real hottie. I have a crush on him and often find myself fantasizing about him. While I know these feelings can be normal, I tend to fixate/obsess. I'm basically looking for advice on how to move past this crush or maybe find a more productive outlet.

Newbie Fantasizing

Here's a more productive outlet: Turn out the lights, climb on top of your husband, get him hard, then sink your pussy down on his cock and ride him while you fantasize about your boss. (Perhaps this is better described as a more productive inlet?) Bonus points if you and your husband are both secure enough in your marriage and cognizant enough of reality to regard crushes on others as normal and, so long as they remain crushes, not a threat to your marriage or commitment. Because then you can talk dirty with your husband about your boss—he can even pretend to be your boss—while you ride your husband's cock.

The other night while my wife and I were watching porn and masturbating together, I suggested we masturbate in front of DirtyRoulette. I briefly explained what the site is about. She asked me if that's what I do—if I get on DR when I masturbate. I replied yes, sometimes—and she was so taken aback, she ended our masturbation session to process it. We're fine now, but do you think this is "cheating"?

Dirty Rouletting

I don't think it's cheating, DR, but you aren't married to me. In other words, if your wife regards you masturbating with strangers on the internet as cheating, then it's cheating. There are, of course, some people out there who regard too many things as cheating—fantasizing about others, looking at porn, even non-webcam-or-porn-enhanced masturbation. People who think this way usually regard cheating as unforgivable and, consequently, their relationships are doomed to failure.

I'm a gay woman in an open marriage. I have met some women I am interested in who are bi and have husbands or male lovers. While I'm into being with these women, I have a concern. I know that sperm can't live outside the body very long, but it can still be alive and kicking inside a woman for several days. If a woman fucks a man, and hours or days later, I fuck that woman with fingers or toys that are later inside of me, can I accidentally get pregnant?

Actively Looking

No.

I'm deep in the grips of a run-of-the-mill midlife crisis. My marriage is in a slump, and I've been sexless longer than at any time since I was a teenager. My wife has granted me the DADT "hall pass," but I have no idea how to go about using it. My life is work, children, activities related to the children, and a few solo hobbies to keep myself fit and sane. I rarely meet new people, except at work, and I can't start a relationship with anyone I meet there. In fact, my career means I am subject to a fair amount of social scrutiny and discretion is paramount. Do you have any suggestions?

Hall Passing

Remember Ashley Madison? The hookup site for married people looking for affair partners? The site that did a terrible job of protecting its user data? The site that got hacked? A hack that outed millions of adulterers and ruined lives? According to a story at the Outline, Ashley Madison is back, baby, and lots of women—real women, not the bots that plagued the site pre-hack—are using it. "Once the dust had settled and other scandals entered the headlines, many people largely forgot about Ashley Madison," Stephanie Russell-Kraft reports. "This might explain why Ashley Madison's user numbers have shot up in recent years."

Any etiquette tips or best practices for introducing my husband to my boyfriend?

Poly Processing

Keep it casual and keep it brief, PP. A quick drink before you and your husband head to a sold-out show you have only two tickets for. If your husband has an unexpectedly emotional reaction to meeting your boyfriend in the flesh—if it dredges up jealousy issues—you won't be putting him in a situation where he has to bottle that up for hours or, worse yet, for a weekend.

Hey, Dan, you missed an opportunity in your response to Afraid To Bleed. She wrote that she bleeds whenever she has sex, and she was concerned about her partner's aversion to blood, which you did address. But women should not bleed after vaginal intercourse. There are many reasons why they might—so it needs to be investigated. Please encourage ATB to visit a doctor.
